

Harshana Ghoorhoo is pursuing a Bachelor of Science in Diplomacy and International Relations and Bachelors of Arts in Modern Languages and Philosophy at Seton Hall University. Harshana works at the Diplomacy Lab at the School of Diplomacy, is the research assistant of Dr. Sara Bjerg Moller who specializes in international security and alliances, and is a research assistant at the Modern War Institute at the West Point Academy. She is currently the Managing Editor of The Diplomatic Envoy, the School of Diplomacy's official foreign affairs newspaper. Harshana has published in Foreign Policy, The Washington Post, and International Policy Digest. She was formerly a research fellow at the Youth Center for Research and published research on the digitalization of youth political engagement. Harshana studies the intersection of military artificial intelligence and emerging technologies with military strategy. She is also interested in assessing how military AI impacts the strategic stability of the United States with Russia. Her regional focuses are the Middle East and Russia. Harshana's undergraduate research project investigates how the level of trust among the U.S. military in autonomous machines and AI systems will impact military strategy and decision-making during combat missions.
