

Jacob Parakilas

I'm an author, consultant and analyst working on US foreign policy and international security, especially the future of war and how technology and geopolitics interact. In my career, I've worked in think tanks, NGOs, the US government, and academia.

In addition to working on my own projects, I'm an Associate with LSE IDEAS, and Defense Columnist at The Diplomat.

I started my career in 2007 working on student visa issues for the US government before returning to academia, studying the intersection of the drugs trade and public policy at the US/Mexico border at the London School of Economics and Political Science. From 2014 until 2019 I was the deputy head of the US and the Americas Programme at Chatham House, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, where my job was to explain the key issues in US foreign and domestic policy to non-American audiences. I also have extensive experience developing and running policy simulation exercises. I grew up in Lewiston, Maine and have lived all over the place: Vienna, St. Petersburg, New York, Washington DC, and London; most recently my wife's job has taken us to Lagos, Nigeria.

